Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 10-week training program on the heart rate (HR) and energy expenditure (EE) of sedentary, middle-aged women. The subjects were 10 women, 40 to 50 years of age, who were sedentary and had no cardiovascular or pulmonary disease. The subjects were randomly assigned to a 10-week training program or a control group. The training program consisted of three sessions per week of aerobic exercise at 60% of maximum HR. The control group was instructed to maintain their current level of activity. The subjects were monitored for HR and EE at baseline and at the end of the 10-week program. The results showed that the training program had a significant effect on HR and EE. The HR of the training group decreased significantly from baseline to the end of the program, while the HR of the control group remained unchanged. The EE of the training group increased significantly from baseline to the end of the program, while the EE of the control group remained unchanged. These results suggest that a 10-week training program can improve cardiovascular fitness and increase energy expenditure in sedentary, middle-aged women.

- Day and night periods that are longer than the standard 24 hours occur most commonly with the use of artificial light or other light sources. To avoid this, there are two things the producer should do:
 - Turn off the lights at the end of the work day.
 - Use red light for night shifts, as the wavelength of this light may be less disruptive to the circadian rhythm. Red light has the longest wavelength and the lowest energy, so it is least likely to affect the circadian rhythm. Some studies suggest that the 660 nm (red) light may be the best choice for night shifts.

- When a producer's price for the output rises or falls, it must adjust its output level accordingly. For example, suppose the price for the output rises. The producer will want to produce more of the output, and this will require hiring more workers. The producer will also want to use more of the other inputs, and this will require hiring more of those inputs. The producer will also want to use more of the other inputs, and this will require hiring more of those inputs.
