Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program on the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women. The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The subjects were randomly assigned to either a supervised walking program or a control group. The walking program consisted of 12 weeks of supervised walking, 3 times per week, for 30 minutes per session. The control group consisted of 12 weeks of no supervised walking. The subjects were assessed at baseline and at 12 weeks. The physical health assessment included a physical examination, a blood pressure measurement, a heart rate measurement, and a body mass index (BMI) measurement. The psychological health assessment included a Beck Depression Inventory (BDI) and a Beck Anxiety Inventory (BAI). The results of the study showed that the walking program had a significant positive effect on the physical and psychological health of the subjects. The walking program resulted in a significant decrease in BMI, a significant decrease in blood pressure, a significant decrease in heart rate, a significant decrease in BDI score, and a significant decrease in BAI score. The control group showed no significant changes in any of the physical or psychological health measures. The results of this study suggest that a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program can improve the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women.
