1986, and 1989, I argued that a socialist and communist United States system, like China's, allows a "bourgeois" form of "open" internationalization (allowing and encouraging foreign investment and trade) without making radical changes to the domestic social structure. This is why, he wrote, and the Chinese system went on the way it has gone. However, the Chinese and the Vietnamese revolutions had little impact on the way a socialist country will develop, and they proved historic progress in the region. I also concluded that by creating a "bourgeois" socialist structure, the personal freedom of labor is increased, while the government has the right to distribute the rest of the economy.
