Report On Old Age Home:

Ergonomic of Old Age Homes and Health Shewanti N. Kashyap, Promila Sharma, A.K. Shukla, 2014-01-01 The Indian family has traditionally provided natural social security to the old people. However, in more recent times, institutions such as old age homes are sharing the traditional role of family due to some factors like increased urbanization, migration of younger adults of the family to towns and in some cases to foreign countries, and increased participation of women in paid employment outside the homes. As the proportion of elder people in the Indian population continues to increase, there is a demand for increased number of old age homes in India and consequently, there is a need to ensure safety. Until recent times, ergonomics have tried to improve industrial situation by improving the condition of work but workstations and furniture in residential buildings, particularly in old age homes, have been neglected to a greater extent. Certain research questions like: are the old age homes built according to the national building codes and with the guideline of ergonomic principles? Are the infrastructure facilities, environmental parameters, work station, interior decoration, and constructional features functional according to capacity of old age? Further, are the furniture built according to the Indian furniture and by keeping the anthropometric data of elderly people? The present book is an attempt to seek answers to these queries. The scholars from various disciplines have contributed towards this important issue. A book of such parameters is of great help to not only those who take care of old aged but also to old age home owners, designers, manufacturers, and organization that are concerned about them.

Old Age Homes Roger Clough, 2021-11-07 Originally published in 1981 in Old Age Homes Roger Clough presents a vivid description of the lives and work of residents and staff in an old people's home. His powerful analysis of the realities of residential work would make a major contribution to improved practice, to social work training, and to social policy formation. Many people, including some social work professionals, still felt that the very existence of residential homes illustrated a failure of society and that living with their own family or on their own was invariably a more satisfactory experience for old people. Roger Clough questions this assumption. He argues that homes are needed and if they are to be good places in which to live and die, there must be a clearer understanding of the interactions that take place within them. The descriptive parts of the study, based on detailed observation and lengthy interviews, strongly reflect the author's genuine compassion and warmth for old people. His most illuminating perceptions are presented from the perspective of the old people themselves, many of whom were conscious of the double bind in which residents and staff are caught. There is a prevailing belief that it is best to keep active in old age, yet many of the elderly had little they thought worth doing while the staff saw their role as doing whatever they could for the residents. Roger Clough uses his material to test two central hypotheses: first, that there is a linkage between the attitudes to aging held by staff and the degree of control over their own lives exercised by residents; and secondly, that this degree of control is strongly correlated with resident satisfaction. Through an acute analysis of these key variables, he demonstrates the circumstances in which living in a home can be for certain old people at certain times the way of life they themselves would choose His conclusions are of the greatest importance for social work practice and for the changing of staff attitudes in training Old Age Homes would challenge anybody who knows or works with a resident in an old people's home But it would be of outstanding value for the managers practitioners trainers and students to whom it was primarily addressed at the time      Unemployment, Old Age and Social Insurance United States.
