

Nature vs. Nurture

Nature vs Nurture is a debate between scientists about what makes people who they are. Some people believe that we are born with certain traits and abilities, while others believe that we are shaped by our environment. Both of these ideas have a lot of evidence behind them, but it's difficult to know for sure which one is right. In this article, we'll explore the debate and see what the latest research has to say about it.

One of the first people to argue that we are born with certain traits was the philosopher Plato. He believed that we are born with a soul that has certain qualities, and that these qualities determine who we are. This idea was later taken up by the philosopher Aristotle, who believed that we are born with a certain nature, and that this nature determines who we are. Both of these ideas were based on the idea that we are born with certain traits, and that these traits determine who we are.

In contrast to these ideas, the philosopher John Locke believed that we are born as a blank slate, and that our environment shapes who we are. He believed that we are born with a certain nature, but that this nature is shaped by our environment. This idea was later taken up by the philosopher Jean-Jacques Rousseau, who believed that we are born with a certain nature, but that this nature is shaped by our environment. Both of these ideas were based on the idea that we are born with a certain nature, but that this nature is shaped by our environment.

More recent research has shown that both nature and nurture play a role in who we are. For example, studies have shown that certain traits are inherited from our parents, but that these traits can be shaped by our environment. This research has led to the development of the idea of gene-environment interaction, which suggests that our genes and our environment both play a role in who we are.

Conclusion

The debate between nature and nurture is a complex one, and there is no simple answer. Both nature and nurture play a role in who we are, and the research is still ongoing.

The "(no) negative evidence" problem: Nativist and social interactionist views on how children recover from grammatical errors Bünyamin Yuvarlak, 2021-03-23 Seminar paper from the year 2019 in the subject English Language and Literature Studies Linguistics grade 1 3 University of Bonn Institut f r Anglistik Amerikanistik und Keltologie course Language Acquisition Psycholinguistik language English abstract This paper aims at exploring how the views on language acquisition have developed over time where they conflict each other and whether it is possible to position oneself on either side The nature vs nurture debate is an everlasting discussion not only in the area of linguistics but science in general This is what makes it particularly interesting because there is always new information to expect Furthermore it is an issue not limited to academic discourse only but one that appears in everyday conversation An interesting aspect of language acquisition more specifically the knowledge of language is the question if children arrive at such knowledge by the mere exposure to positive evidence i e the language of adults they are surrounded with or if negative evidence also has an impact i e children s knowledge of language is based on explicit or implicit feedback to whether an utterance was in some way incorrect The two terms will be defined and looked into in more detail in the second chapter In the following the correlation between the nature vs nurture debate and language acquisition will be explained first The respective chapter provides a brief insight into how the nativist approach developed mainly based on Chomsky s 1988 notion of Universal Grammar UG and the type of criticism it brought along It further explains the connection between the respective theories and the grammatical aspect of language acquisition In the last section the main problems of experience based language learning will be displayed and defined The third chapter starts with a section dedicated to where the particular view that humans need innate structures for a correct knowledge of language stems from It continues with a detailed look on the no negative evidence problem The non existence of negative evidence and which role it plays in terms of language acquisition will be explored from different standpoints by nativists as well as non nativists

Human Assessment

and Cultural Factors John W. Berry, S.H. Irvine, 2013-11-11 Against the background of NATO's Istanbul conference of 1971 Cronbach and Drenth 1972 the Kingston conference shows that great progress has been made by the community of cross cultural psychologists The progress is as much in the psychology of the investigators as in the investigations being reported In 1971 the investigators were mostly strangers to each other Behind their reports lay radically different field experiences disparate research traditions and mutually contradictory social ideals Istanbul was not a Tower of Babel but participants did speak past each other Now a community exists thanks to the meetings of NATO and the International Association for Cross Cultural Psychology to flourishing journals and the Triandis et al 1980 Handbook The members tend to know each other can anticipate how their formulations will fall on the ears of others and accept superficially divergent approaches as making up a collective enterprise Ten years ago there was open conflict between those who confronted exotic peoples with traditional tests and applied traditional interpretations to the responses and the relativists who insisted that tasks test taking and interpretation cannot be standardized in the ways that matter Today's investigators are conscious of the need to revalidate tasks carried into alien settings they often prefer to redesign the mode of presentation and to attune the subject to test taking They face the difficulties squarely and recognize that even the best means of coping are only partially successful
