

must identify the cause of these trends instead of dealing with the symptoms of juvenile crime.

Incidence

A study by Eaton et al. (2002) showed that 5.9 percent of students carried weapons including guns and knives 30 days before the survey, the incidents were 3 times as much in male students as in female students. The authors also established that 7.8 percent of students had been threatened or injured by a weapon in the period of 12 months prior to study; in this case, the prevalence in male students was twice as much as that in female students. In the 12 months prior to the study, 12.4 percent of students had been involved in physical fights at least once, with the rate in male students being twice as much as it was in female students. In 30 days before the study, 5.5 percent of students had been absent from school at least once due to a feeling that the school environment was not safe; both male and female students had equal numbers in this case. According to the differential association theory, boys interact with other boys and end up picking the attitudes and techniques that motivate them to participate in violent activities more than their female counterparts.

Moreover, violence in schools is not just perpetrated on students, between 7 percent and 10 percent of teachers had been threatened of injury by students at least once in 2003 (Peek-Asa et al., 2003). Five percent of teachers were physically attacked by students in 2003, and other non-teaching staff were victims too, especially school bus drivers. According to the social disorganization theory, cases of school violence recorded occurred mostly in urban schools, with rural and suburban schools accounting fewer cases. This means that by virtue of living in urban areas and being exposed to violence in day-to-day activities and the
