

THE EFFECTS OF THE 1997-1998 EL NIÑO ON THE WORLD'S FISH AND FISHERIES

The 1997-1998 El Niño event had a significant impact on the world's fish and fisheries. It caused a decline in the catch of many major fish species, particularly in the Pacific and Indian Oceans. The event also led to a shift in the distribution of fish stocks, with many species moving to new areas. This was due to changes in ocean temperatures and currents, which affected the spawning and growth of fish.

The impact of the El Niño event was not uniform across all regions. Some areas experienced a decline in catch, while others saw an increase. For example, in the Pacific, the catch of tuna and other large pelagic fish declined significantly. In the Indian Ocean, the catch of some species increased, while others declined. The event also affected the distribution of fish stocks, with many species moving to new areas.
