

New Common App Essay Questions

To help us along, I've highlighted the most important words in these two short sentences. I'm going to address each below—not in the order of their appearance—but in order of their importance.

1. Some students have a background or story that is so central to their identity that they believe their application would be incomplete without it. If this sounds like you, then please share your story.

Identity: This is the pivot of the prompt. However you address this prompt, you are being asked about your identity. You are asked to address the fundamental nature of how you see yourself as a person. Who are you? What are you? What makes you, well, you? Admissions officers want to be able to say, “hey, I understand who this kid is and where he came from, because the kid understands this about himself and is able to communicate it in a clear, compelling fashion.” So, this essay must address your identity, however you define it.

Background: College admissions people know that some people have an interesting background that is the source of their identity. This background can be cultural, ethnic, familial, medical, physical, economic, or just about any other set of circumstances that defines who you are as a person.

Story: Some students have a story that helps define who they are. A story, by definition, is a narrative, an account of events in one's life that may help to shape your identity. A background is something that is not really fixed in time; it's a circumstance. A story, on the other hand, exists in time, and has a beginning, middle, and end. Do you have a story that helps to explain the way you see yourself, that has helped to form you as a person? If so, this is the story at the core of this prompt.

Incomplete: This word is also important. If your background or story does not really help to shape your identity, then perhaps your application is “complete” without this story. You should then be looking at other prompts for inspiration.

2. Recount an incident or time when you experienced failure. How did it affect you, and what lessons did you learn?

Incident or time: You are being asked for a specific event in time. Thus you will again tell a story to your reader. It should be a very succinct story, but it should have a beginning, middle, and an end. You want to give enough detail that your reader can follow the narrative, but not so long that you get boring—or worse, go over the word count limit.

Affect: What was the impact of this failure? How did it make others see you? How did you see yourself after this incident? Be reflective. Examine your emotions. Did it make you angry, embarrassed, disappointed, secretly thrilled, or downright sad? What was the immediate impact of your failure? This is perhaps the hardest part of answering this prompt: you have to go into that mess of feelings that you've tried to put behind you. But the admissions office is asking you to share, so share you must.

Lessons: This seems obvious, but these lessons can be hard to articulate. So begin with a list: how many things can you pinpoint that you learned from this mistake? Think about how you can learn things at different times, too. Sometimes we learn things from failure immediately. Other lessons take longer to sink in. Again, you have to be analytical. I recommend that you come up with three solid lessons for this essay.

The ultimate direction of this essay should be positive and optimistic. You should not worry too much about the nature of the mistake: we've all made them, and admissions officers, frankly, have seen them all. The point of this is to allow you to demonstrate your maturity, your humility, and your ability to turn a bad experience into a good one.

Conning Harvard Julie Zauzmer, Xi Yu, 2013-09-03 In 2011 a 24 year old man pled guilty to falsifying his application to Harvard University bilking the world's most prestigious university out of more than 45,000 in prizes and scholarships Using forged SAT scores transcripts and letters of recommendation Adam Wheeler outsmarted Harvard's admissions office and then went even further Once accepted into the Ivy League he kept lying cheating and succeeding winning thousands of dollars in prizes and grants But then he shot too far During his senior year Wheeler applied for Rhodes and Fulbright scholarships a gamble that finally exposed his extensive tangle of lies. Alerted that he was under suspicion, Wheeler fled Harvard but did not stop. He successfully filed more fraudulent applications at top tier schools across the country until some vigilant admissions officers, Massachusetts police, and even his own parents forced him off his computer and into court. As reporters for The Harvard Crimson, Julie Zauzmer and Xi Yu covered the case from the moment the news of Wheeler's indictment broke. In the course of their reporting, they interviewed dozens of friends, roommates, teachers, and advisors who knew Wheeler at the many phases of his suspect academic career. Their fascinating account reveals how one serial scammer took on the competitive world of the Ivy League and almost won.
