By the early 1990s, however, it was clear that the economic benefits of trade and globalization, though real, had been unevenly shared. There had been problems, notably the Caribbean, where the effects of globalization had not been a good one for the majority of the population. In fact, in the 1990s, Caribbean countries experienced a process of de-industrialization that placed the process of the transfer of technology, particularly in the form of computerization, to the Caribbean, on the one hand, and the transfer of technology to the Caribbean, on the other, in a very negative light. The Caribbean region, which had been a major beneficiary of the economic benefits of globalization, was now being seen as a region that was being left behind by the rest of the world. The Caribbean region, which had been a major beneficiary of the economic benefits of globalization, was now being seen as a region that was being left behind by the rest of the world.
