Population and Ecology

What are the factors that influence the growth of a population? How do these factors interact to determine the population's growth rate? (10 marks)

1. The Growth Rate

a) The population growth rate is the rate at which a population increases or decreases in size. It is determined by the balance of birth rate (number of births per individual per unit time) and death rate (number of deaths per individual per unit time). The growth rate can be positive, zero, or negative, depending on whether the birth rate is greater than, equal to, or less than the death rate.

2. Factors Affecting Population Growth

There are two main factors that influence population growth: biotic factors and abiotic factors.

a) Biotic factors are factors that are related to the organisms themselves, such as birth rate and death rate.

Birth rate is the number of births per individual per unit time.

b) Abiotic factors are factors that are related to the environment, such as temperature, water availability, and food availability.

Temperature affects the rate of metabolism, which in turn affects the rate of growth.

3. Exploring the Population Growth Rate

There are two main ways to explore the population growth rate: direct measurement and indirect measurement.

a) Direct measurement involves counting the number of individuals in a population at two different times and calculating the change in size. This method is only possible for small, well-defined populations.

Indirect measurement involves using a variety of techniques to estimate the growth rate.

b) Indirect measurement involves using a variety of techniques to estimate the growth rate. These techniques include:

Method	Advantages	Disadvantages
Direct measurement	Simple and accurate	Only possible for small populations
Indirect measurement	Can be used for large populations	More complex and less accurate
Birth rate	Can be estimated from birth records	Only possible for human populations
Death rate	Can be estimated from death records	Only possible for human populations
Population growth rate	Can be estimated from birth and death records	Only possible for human populations

There are two main ways to estimate the population growth rate: direct measurement and indirect measurement.

a) Direct measurement involves counting the number of individuals in a population at two different times and calculating the change in size. This method is only possible for small, well-defined populations.

Indirect measurement involves using a variety of techniques to estimate the growth rate.
