Abstract

Abstract

The purpose of this study was to determine whether there were differences in the prevalence of risk factors for coronary artery disease between two groups of men who had been exposed to asbestos during their working lives. The subjects were divided into two groups based on the duration of exposure to asbestos. The first group had been exposed for less than 10 years, and the second group had been exposed for 10 years or more. The results showed that the prevalence of risk factors for coronary artery disease was significantly higher in the second group than in the first group. This suggests that prolonged exposure to asbestos may increase the risk of developing coronary artery disease.
