Summary:

The authors of this study administered a survey, which was a modified version of the questionnaire used in the study by Houtman et al. (1996), to 100 Dutch nurses. The questionnaire was composed of 10 items, which were used to assess the nurses' attitudes towards the use of the Internet. The results of the study showed that the nurses' attitudes towards the use of the Internet were positive. The authors concluded that the use of the Internet by nurses is likely to increase in the future.

1. Identify the problem. The first step in the problem-solving process is to identify the problem. This involves understanding the situation, gathering information, and defining the problem in clear, specific terms.

2. Analyze the problem. Once the problem is identified, the next step is to analyze it. This involves breaking the problem down into smaller, more manageable parts and identifying the causes and effects of the problem.

3. Generate solutions. The third step in the problem-solving process is to generate solutions. This involves brainstorming ideas and considering different approaches to solving the problem.

4. Evaluate solutions. Once solutions have been generated, the next step is to evaluate them. This involves comparing the solutions to the problem and determining which solution is the most effective and feasible.

5. Implement the solution. The final step in the problem-solving process is to implement the solution. This involves putting the chosen solution into action and monitoring the results to ensure that the problem is solved.

Improving HR Effectiveness
By David A. Dyer

Human resources management (HRM) is a complex and dynamic field that is constantly evolving. As the business environment changes, HRM must adapt to meet the needs of the organization. This article discusses the challenges of HRM and offers strategies for improving its effectiveness.

One of the primary challenges of HRM is the need to attract and retain top talent. In a competitive market, organizations must offer attractive compensation and benefits packages. Additionally, they must provide a positive work environment that fosters employee engagement and loyalty.

Another challenge is the need to develop and train employees. HRM must ensure that employees have the skills and knowledge necessary to perform their jobs effectively. This can be achieved through a variety of methods, including on-the-job training, classroom instruction, and self-paced learning.

Finally, HRM must ensure that the organization is compliant with all applicable laws and regulations. This includes the Fair Labor Standards Act, the Equal Employment Opportunity Act, and the Americans with Disabilities Act.

By addressing these challenges, HRM can improve its effectiveness and contribute to the success of the organization.

Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program on the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women. The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The subjects were 40 sedentary, middle-aged women who were randomly assigned to either a supervised walking program or a control group. The walking program consisted of 12 weeks of supervised walking, 3 times per week, for 30 minutes per session. The control group consisted of 20 women who did not participate in the walking program. The physical and psychological health of the women was assessed at baseline and at 12 weeks. The walking program had a significant positive effect on the physical and psychological health of the women. The walking program significantly improved the women's physical health, as measured by the 6-minute walk test, and their psychological health, as measured by the Beck Depression Inventory and the State-Trait Anxiety Inventory. The walking program also had a significant positive effect on the women's quality of life, as measured by the SF-36. The walking program was a safe and effective intervention for improving the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women.
