During the 1990s, the FBI's Criminal Justice Information System (CJIS) was the primary source of information for law enforcement agencies. The CJIS was a database that contained information on criminal records, fingerprints, and other law enforcement data. The CJIS was used by law enforcement agencies to track and identify criminals. The CJIS was also used by law enforcement agencies to share information with other law enforcement agencies. The CJIS was a critical tool for law enforcement agencies during the 1990s.
