Regionalization of Watersheds A.R. Rao,V. V. Srinivas,2008-04-18 Design of water control structures reservoir management economic evaluation of flood protection projects land use planning and management flood insurance assessment and other projects rely on knowledge of magnitude and frequency of floods Often estimation of floods is not easy because of lack of flood records at the target sites Regional flood frequency analysis RFFA alleviates this problem by utilizing flood records pooled from other watersheds which are similar to the watershed of the target site in flood characteristics Clustering techniques are used to identify group s of watersheds which have similar flood characteristics This book is a comprehensive reference on how to use these techniques for RFFA and is the first of its kind It provides a detailed account of several recently developed clustering techniques including those based on fuzzy set theory and artificial neural networks It also documents research findings on application of clustering techniques to RFFA that remain scattered in various hydrology and water resources journals The optimal number of groups defined in an area is based on cluster validation measures and L moment based homogeneity tests These form the bases to check the regions for homogeneity The subjectivity involved and the effort needed to identify homogeneous groups of watersheds with conventional approaches are greatly reduced by using efficient clustering techniques discussed in this book Furthermore better flood estimates with smaller confidence intervals are obtained by analysis of data from homogeneous watersheds Consequently the problem of over or under designing by using these flood estimates is reduced This leads to optimal economic design of structures The advantages of better regionalization of watersheds and their utility are entering into hydrologic practice Audience This book will be of interest to researchers in stochastic hydrology practitioners in hydrology and graduate students Data Clustering in C++ Guojun Gan, 2011-03-28 Data clustering is a highly interdisciplinary field the goal of which is to divide a set of objects into homogeneous groups such that objects in the same group are similar and objects in different groups are quite distinct Thousands of theoretical papers and a number of books on data clustering have been published over the past 50 years However few books exist to teach people how to implement data clustering algorithms This book was written for anyone who wants to implement or improve their data clustering algorithms Using object oriented design and programming techniques Data Clustering in C exploits the commonalities of all data clustering algorithms to create a flexible set of reusable classes that simplifies the implementation of any data clustering algorithm Readers can follow the development of the base data clustering classes and several popular data clustering algorithms Additional topics such as data pre processing data visualization cluster visualization and cluster interpretation are briefly covered This book is divided into three parts Data Clustering and C Preliminaries A review of basic concepts of data clustering the unified modeling language object oriented programming in C and design patterns A C Data Clustering Framework The development of data clustering base classes Data Clustering Algorithms The implementation of several popular data clustering algorithms A key to learning a clustering algorithm is to implement and experiment the clustering algorithm Complete listings of classes examples unit test cases and GNU configuration files are included in the appendices of this book as well as in the downloadable resources The only requirements to compile the code are a modern C compiler and the Boost C libraries Lecture Notes in Data Mining Michael W.
