

RESTRICTED TAKEOFF

Caution: Avoid sudden bursts of power in the takeoff. Make it smooth and steady.

After you have pulled out and lined up on the runway, make sure that the steerable tail-wheel is locked—it must be locked with the stick back for takeoff.

Then advance the throttle gradually, and smoothly, up to the desired manifold pressure. Don't hunt the tail up by pushing forward on the stick until you have sufficient airspeed to give you effective rudder control.

This is important to watch in the takeoff, since the P-51, like all single-engine planes, has a tendency to turn left because of torque. If you leave the tail off the ground too quickly with the elevators, better be ready to use right rudder promptly.

Keep the airplane in a 3-point attitude until you have plenty of airspeed. In a normal takeoff, the rudder trim tab is sufficient to make the torque almost unnoticeable.

After takeoff:

1. Raise the landing gear by pulling the landing gear lever inward and up. Be sure it catches in the up position.

2. Throttle back to climbing mixture.

3. Adjust the prop to climbing rpm.

4. Re-trim the ship for climbing attitude.

5. Turn the booster pump to normal.

6. Then check over all your instruments that they are functioning properly and exceeding their limitations.

In checking the instruments, make sure the ammeter indicator shows the generator is charging properly. Immediately after the ammeter should go up to not over 30, then drop back below 50. Be sure it drops to normal, or you will overcharge your battery. Overcharging can ruin a battery just as overloading.

Make sure, also, that hydraulic pressure builds up to approximately 1000 psi as landing gear retracts completely.

LANDING

On approaching the field for a landing, be sure to check around the cockpit before getting into the landing pattern. Anything you can do at this stage in setting controls or making adjustments allows you that much more time to concentrate on the actual landing later.

In approaching the field:

1. Check the fuel tanks and select the fullest tank for the landing.

2. Put the fuel booster pump on NORMAL.

3. Check the mixture control setting—make sure it is in either AUTO RICH or RUN, depending upon the type throttle you have.

4. Set the prop control to about 1.

5. Check the ammeter reading.

6. See that your shoulder harness

7. Then make sure your radio proper channel.

The traffic pattern you use depends upon the local situation. Every field has a pattern, and this pattern may vary from time to time, depending upon local limitations. Therefore, no set is recommended or given in this book.
