

Abstract

How can the system be designed to be effective?

100

There is a growing consensus among scholars that the current international system is in a state of transition. The current system is based on a bipolar world, with the United States and the Soviet Union as the two superpowers. However, the end of the Cold War has led to a new era of multipolarity, with the emergence of new powers such as China, India, and Brazil. This new era is characterized by a more complex and interconnected world, where the interests of different powers are often in conflict. The current system is also facing a number of challenges, including the rise of terrorism, the spread of nuclear weapons, and the impact of climate change. These challenges require a new approach to international relations, one that is more cooperative and inclusive. The current system is in a state of flux, and the future is uncertain. However, it is clear that the world is moving in a new direction, and the current system is being replaced by a new one.
