anyone wanting to get a handle on this provocative concept Sociological Terminology and Classification Schemes Lalit P. Pathak, 2000 The Degradation of Work? Stephen Wood, 2024-09-02 Originally published in 1982 and now reissued with a new Preface by Stephen Wood the contributors of this book discuss the issues surrounding the organization of labour They use insights from industrial sociology historical research and Marxist Feminist debates In particular they stress that work organization cannot be seen simply as a reflection of the strategy of an omniscient management any examination of it must involve product and labour markets technology trade unionism and above all the way in which production systems are jointly created out of the interrelationship between management and workforces The Degradation of Work asks if there has been a general de skilling and routinization of jobs and if skilled jobs are really any different from semi skilled or unskilled ones

Minimum Income Schemes in Europe International Labour Organisation, 2003 This book investigates the paradox of rich countries of Western Europe who have high levels of poverty whilst proclaiming its eradication as one of the primary social and economic goals It looks at how policies often do not achieve their goals why countries need mechanisms to reduce wage inequality and why they choose to provide universal benefits instead of systems of selective benefits targeted at the poor Along with cross countries comparisons the volume also presents analysis of the minimum income in France Portugal Italy Finland Ireland Belgium and Greece Workers' Participative Schemes Helen Tsiganou, 1991-05-30 Helen Tsiganou's study explores the enormous diversity of worker participation schemes across national contexts Using a historical comparative approach worker participation schemes are examined in two major settings the developed capitalist countries of the United States Japan Sweden Norway England Germany and France and the centrally planned less developed socialist countries of Yugoslavia Poland Hungary Czechoslovakia China and the Soviet Union Tsiganou addresses the conditions under which participation schemes emerge and the reasons for similarities or differences among these schemes She first studies the origins and history of schemes within a given national setting She then draws on specific national experiences and makes cross national comparisons This is not a systematic detailed country by country comparison but an explanation of the enormous diversity of worker participative schemes through comparative analysis Part I of this volume examines the motives and goals behind various participatory schemes and their development and outcomes in the two distinct settings The comparative logic and analytical framework of the book is laid out against a background of existing theoretical and analytical work Meanings and definitions attached to worker participation and their significance in denoting the dynamics of power within the workplace and society are also covered This section concludes with a discussion of the book's major assumptions Part II deals with the diversity of workers participation schemes in several developed countries countries with advanced industry and democratic pluralist political systems Part III discusses schemes in several centrally planned socialist societies and their efforts through reforms to correct their weaknesses The final section summarizes the findings of the study and explores issues that emerge as cross national and cross sectional comparisons are made Educational Leadership

Relationally Scott Eacott, 2015-01-19 Educational leadership management and administration has a rich history of epistemological and ontological dialogue and debate. However, in recent times at least since the publication of Colin Evers and Gabriele Lakowski's trilogy Knowing, Exploring and Doing Educational Administration, there has been a distinct dearth of Educational Leadership. Relationally explicitly returns matters of epistemology and ontology to the centre of the discussion. Through a sustained and rigorous engagement with contemporary thought and analysis, Scott Eacott articulates and defends a relational approach to scholarship in educational leadership management and administration. Eacott belongs to a group of scholars in educational administration who could be called meta-sociologists. This group blends sociology, historical revisionism, managerial theories and general philosophy to emphasise the relevance of sociological analysis in the field of educational administration. Proposing a relational turn, Eacott outlines a methodological agenda for constructing an alternative approach to educational leadership management and administration scholarship that might be persuasive beyond the critical frontier. The relational research programme is arguably the most ambitious agenda in educational leadership management and administration coming out of Australia since Colin Evers and Gabriele Lakowski's Natural Coherentism and Richard Bates' Critical Theory of Educational Administration. As a research agenda, it engages with the centrality of administration in constructions of the social world, the legitimisation of popular labels such as leadership, the inexhaustible and inseparable grounding of administrative labour in time and space, and overcomes contemporary tensions of individualism, collectivism and structure/agency to provide a productive rather than merely critical space to theorise educational leadership management and administration. Ethnomethodology, Conversation Analysis and Constructive Analysis Graham Button, Michael Lynch, Wes Sharrock, 2022-09-23 This book revisits the arguments by which Harvey Sacks and Harold Garfinkel opposed the widespread attempt in the social sciences to construct disciplinary theories and methods in place of common sense knowledge of human action and proposed instead an alternative that would investigate the organised methods of natural language use and common sense reasoning that constitute social orders. Arguments that led to the establishment and proliferation of ethnomethodology and conversation analysis. As the very constructive analysis that they opposed has begun to be incorporated into influential lines of research in ethnomethodology and conversation analysis, the authors return to the founding insights of the field and reiterate the importance of Garfinkel and Sacks' original and controversial proposals for an alternate sociology of practical action and practical reasoning. Showing how constructive analysis has become entrenched in ethnomethodology and conversation analysis and arguing for a need to reboot these approaches, this volume constitutes a call for a renewal of the radical alternative proposed by Garfinkel and Sacks. A Question of Knowledge Richenda Power, 2014-06-11 This book uniquely illustrates the key concepts and issues involved with recent examples drawn from empirical research, highlighting the practical relevance of difficult theoretical and philosophical concepts to the way in which we think and talk about knowledge both in an everyday and in an academic sociological context. Troublemakers Stephen
