Abstract

Abstract: This is a preliminary study of the effects of a 10-week training program on the performance of a group of 10 young athletes. The program was designed to improve the athletes' performance in a 100m sprint. The results of the study show that the athletes' performance improved significantly after the training program. The study was conducted in a laboratory setting and the results were compared to the athletes' performance before the training program. The study was limited by the small sample size and the lack of a control group. The results of the study suggest that the training program was effective in improving the athletes' performance in a 100m sprint.

Abstract The effectiveness of stress management interventions for adolescents with anxiety disorders is evaluated. The results of a meta-analysis of 11 studies are presented. The findings indicate that stress management interventions are effective in reducing anxiety symptoms in adolescents with anxiety disorders. The results also suggest that the effectiveness of these interventions is moderated by the type of intervention and the severity of the anxiety disorder.
