State Water Agencies in Nigeria Berta Macheve,Alexander Danilenko,Roohi Abdullah,Abel Bove,L. Joe Moffitt,2015-09-11 Investments on the order of US 6 billion are estimated to be needed in the water sector in Nigeria in the next 10 years if the country is to achieve universal water supply coverage This is the main finding of State Water Agencies in Nigeria A Performance Assessment in which the objective is to provide the government of Nigeria with a structured and coherent quantitative snapshot of the state of its urban water sector The report focuses on water provision services from the States Water Authorities or Water Boards SWAs as they are the major and only regulated agencies that provide water to the urban population Sanitation provision is not addressed because the majority of SWAs do not provide this service to their customers This report highlights the issues related to the performance of SWAs tariffs levels and structures financing mechanisms and concerns with governance within the SWA and state governments For example due to accelerated urbanization and migration of the population to the large cities the average coverage by SWAs is about 40 percent and the average domestic water consumption was 26 liters per capita per day in 2013 well below the recommended average The remaining majority of the population relies on alternative service providers To the extent possible the report also shows the impact of these institutional weaknesses on customers costs fiscal subsidies to the sector and financing requirements that are needed to scale up the investment and showcase that the related operational and maintenance expenditure of the SWAs can actually be covered from the various financing sources In fact the coping costs of the population getting water from alternative water providers is assessed at US 700 million a year and this number is growing In addition utilities get about US 100 million in operational subsidies that cover labor electricity and other operational costs State Water Agencies in Nigeria A Performance Assessment provides the government of Nigeria with a structured and coherent quantitative snapshot of the state of its urban water sector Ultimately this report is a first step toward performance benchmarking in Nigeria s water and sanitation sector The findings summarized in this publication should eventually serve as a tool for utilities and their authorities and stakeholders as well as for bilateral and multilateral donors in their efforts to monitor the performance and progress of each water provider and the sector as a whole The Nigerian Journal of Forestry ,1988 Disability Amendments of 1982 United States.
