

Blackburne, 1997, p. 131: "Black and Shapere's (1996) book is a very welcome contribution to the philosophy of science, and in particular to the philosophy of biology."

But as things are, evolutionary developmental biology has been left out of modern biology. It has been, in particular, ignored when biology has been concerned with the development of the organism. For several years evolutionary and developmental biology have been considered separate, and even opposed, fields of research. It is time that is not so. A new type of organization must be created, clearly involving both fields together – development, biology, and evolution.

In addition, we have to give more weight to the study of comparative developmental biology.

Finally, it is an important contribution to the organization of the field to give more weight to the study of the development of the organism. This is a very important field of research, and it is time that it is given the attention it deserves.
