I. Title: DNA Plant Extraction Experiment (Onion DNA Kitchen Extraction)

II. Objectives:

This experiment is anchored to achieve the following objectives:

- To understand and familiarize the laboratory techniques and methods in a DNA extraction.
- To be able to extract the deoxyribonucleic acid (DNA) from watermelon and mango using table salt and detergent solution, and ethanol.
- To be able to compare the extracted DNA from different plant/sample sources (e.g., onion and garlic)

III. Brief Overview

All of the genetic information required for regulating cellular growth and development is contained in the polymer DNA, which may be found in all living cells. Numerous genetic illnesses are caused by errors in DNA. DNA is found inside a nucleus that is attached to a membrane in complex cells, such as those in multicellular animals and plants. Cells and related membranes must be broken down in order to isolate DNA. Dozens of other biological components can then be separated from a crude sample of DNA.

Usually, in a biochemistry laboratory, cell membranes are first disrupted by crushing them in a buffered detergent solution. The detergent weakens cellular membranes and inhibits nucleases, which are enzymes that would break down DNA. The detergent solution is usually buffered to pH 8 because slightly basic conditions make DNA more soluble and stable. High purity of Ethanol may be added to the extract in order to precipitate the DNA from the cellular solution. Because cells include ribonucleic acid (RNA) and dozens of different proteins, which will also precipitate in this process, the DNA produced in this way won't be pure. If DNA had to be extracted from these other materials, several more purification stages would be necessary.

Onion From Dna Formal Report:

Documenting Domestication Melinda A. Zeder, Daniel Bradley, Eve Emshwiller, Bruce D. Smith, 2006-06-20 Agriculture is the lever with which humans transformed the earth over the last 10 000 years and created new forms of plant and animal species that have forever altered the face of the planet In the last decade significant technological and methodological advances in both molecular biology and archaeology have revolutionized the study of plant and animal domestication and are reshaping our understanding of the transition from foraging to farming one of the major turning points in human history This groundbreaking volume for the first time brings together leading archaeologists and biologists working on the domestication of both plants and animals to consider a wide variety of archaeological and genetic approaches to tracing the origin and dispersal of domesticates It provides a comprehensive overview of the state of the art in this quickly changing field as well as reviews of recent findings on specific crop and livestock species in the Americas Eurasia and Africa Offering a unique global perspective it explores common challenges and potential avenues for future progress in documenting domestication

Trade, Development and Environment Great Britain: Parliament: House of Commons: Environmental Audit Committee, 2006-08-16 This report finds that Department for International Development DFID has the potential to take the lead internationally on integrating the environment into development the structures and links exist but there is still an under appreciation of the role of the environment in sustainable development The report sets out the background covering what poor people want the Millennium Ecosystem Assessment and Millennium Development Goals It then considers development aid and how it is changing Then the DFID s performance in integrating environment into development is critically examined Subjects covered include DFID policy water climate and energy agriculture growth environmental capacity environmental screening and the environment strategy The Committee notes the failure of the Department to develop a coherent approach on the ground as a damning review of country programmes has shown It also highlights many areas where policy is poorly drafted and implemented and where the Department s environmental expertise has been allowed to wither The recent White Paper Eliminating world poverty 2006 Cm 6876 ISBN 0101687621 is seen as a missed opportunity to make the environment as central to its work as the Department itself has made clear it should be Cumulated Index Medicus, 1967
