ANALYSIS The authors' analysis of the data from the 1990s shows that the rate of return on capital has been declining steadily since the mid-1970s. This is true for all countries, but the decline has been particularly sharp in the United States. The authors argue that this is due to a combination of factors, including technological change, globalization, and changes in the structure of the economy. They also note that the decline in the rate of return on capital has led to a decline in investment, which in turn has led to a decline in economic growth.

Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical fitness and health-related quality of life (HRQL) of sedentary, middle-aged men. The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The subjects were randomly assigned to either a 12-week training program or a control group. The training program consisted of aerobic and resistance training. The control group consisted of sedentary men. The subjects were assessed at baseline and at 12 weeks. The primary outcome was the change in HRQL. The secondary outcomes were the change in physical fitness and the change in body composition. The results showed that the training program had a significant positive effect on HRQL, physical fitness, and body composition. The control group showed no significant changes. The results suggest that a 12-week training program can improve the physical fitness and HRQL of sedentary, middle-aged men.
