- Do not expect that appearance of new evidence of stability in head tilting, movement of the head to the side or head turning.
- Do not expect that the appearance of head turning will be the only sign of improvement, and this can result in a lot of concern in parents.
- Do not expect that the appearance of eye movements.
- Be aware that even an additional 10% improvement in gross motor control for a child with CP may result in a child who can sit. This is a significant step forward, though it may not be the goal of the family, who may want to see the child walk, stand and be able to hold their head up, as well as sit, so it is important that the parents do not become disappointed when their child does not sit by year 18.
- Do not discuss that the appearance of eye movements.

Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the heart rate (HR) and energy expenditure (EE) of sedentary, middle-aged women. The subjects were randomly assigned to a control group (CON) and an exercise group (EX). The EX group performed a 12-week training program consisting of three sessions per week of aerobic and resistance training. The CON group remained sedentary. HR and EE were measured at baseline and after 12 weeks. The EX group showed a significant decrease in HR and a significant increase in EE compared to the CON group. The results suggest that a 12-week training program can improve cardiovascular fitness and increase energy expenditure in sedentary, middle-aged women.

- When a producer's price for the output rises or falls, it must adjust its output level accordingly. A rise in the price of the output will increase the producer's profit, and a fall will decrease it. The profit-maximizing output level is determined by the profit-maximizing rule: produce where marginal revenue equals marginal cost. If the price of the output rises, the marginal revenue curve shifts up, and the profit-maximizing output level increases. If the price of the output falls, the marginal revenue curve shifts down, and the profit-maximizing output level decreases.
