Marshall's organization is a nationally prominent nonprofit think-tank. The organization was founded in 1950, under the name National Institute of Economic and Social Research, and changed its name to the current one in 1986. The organization's main focus is on economic policy, with a particular emphasis on the role of government in the economy. The organization's research is conducted by a staff of economists and other social scientists, and is published in a number of journals and books. The organization also provides policy advice to the U.S. government and other organizations.

Members' contributions show the funds generally met the targets of 100 per cent. Managing authorities' expenditure responsibilities were covered to the general budget level of 90 per cent in that year, and the other authority used about 90 per cent of its resources to provide fully-fledged services, while the other general budget authority, the authority, stated in the annual report that it was not possible to provide fully-fledged services and that the general budget authority was not providing the services.

Multi-level management involvement is generally only implemented following requests from below to address existing and emerging HR issues and the opportunity to build trust in officials who previously remained removed from the operational landscape. Encouraging staff participation in the general business development efforts and involvement in the design of programs is an important element, and the timing of such efforts must therefore reflect the overall work schedule for training and policy review. Planning and action about personnel policy reflects the human side of work. The organization must also encourage employee participation.
