The simplest way to reduce memory requirements for \mathcal{H}^1 is to change the order of variable grouping in the hierarchical search scheme, resulting in the Reordered Grouping (R-GRU) algorithm. The main difference between GRU and reordered hierarchical grouping is that the search starts in the \mathcal{H}^0 space, i.e. smaller than the depth, as with grouping. The search order is the same as in GRU, i.e. up to the depth that exceeded the search in the previous iteration. GRU is preferred for many problems with very small and simple subproblems, especially associated with grouping, i.e. subproblems of small cardinality. In addition, since the same difficulties with small subproblems as those the iterative process of splitting can easily be solved in GRU, the search results are usually more efficient than those obtained by GRU and GRU.

Minimum-Deviation Search (MDS) is a simple recursive algorithm that attempts to return the sequence of numbers from the search tree using only those open. The algorithm is shown in Figure 1.26. The number of nodes in the i th recursive subproblem search, the number of numbers remaining, along the current path, is given by l (not the number of leaf nodes in the i th node of the tree subproblem path available from any sequence of the current node). At the current node, usually the root, the recursive search leads to the alternative path. As the recursive search, MDS explores the i th node of each node along the path until leafReached (line 10) has been reached. In this way, MDS traverses the i th node of the search tree in the recursive path and can identify a single solution if one
