

Identifying What Were Big Picture Changes

What were the big picture changes associated with this event? Answer the questions: What was your assessment of the event prior to what happened in other downstream reaches?

1. Why did this event have the White River's history? (background)

It occurred like no river-gauge-based monitoring event has ever before because it "disappeared upstream". External forces from outside the river system caused a massive sediment load to rapidly increase. It is more than just the monitoring, or flow measurements by one location or gauging station, need study the "big picture" and their histories' interactions.

2. What caused the event to happen? (causation)

External forcing removed from a reading of water level observations is likely just a result of flooding downstream and those water levels had no direct measurement. When a river baseline suddenly increases it is likely there are multiple

3. What are the inputs and the output? (flow)

What inputs and what output do you see? Change if needed.

4. On what scale and magnitude would these other variables cause the White River?

Other changing the flow, both upstream and downstream, could include shifting alluvium, changing slopes, changes in bed, creating larger pathways, floods, floods, landslides, or even the interconnected systems. Downstream flows, meanders, backfilling paths, etc.

5. How did the event change the river system's behavior prior to the event? (history)

It really has historical values that change, and others not just flow. It's not just hydrology we also want to understand. Landslide locations, channelized areas, upstream developments, and downstream features, and other potential impacts to conditions. It's about the river's past about the river's current condition flow and ecology. Changes in hydrology, changes place location of the major flood-control structures, can the flood bypasses? Is a dam? Changes in the river's flow, volume, and timing, and the water system's capacity and integrity. The human-made, and possibly natural.
