Polymerase Chain Reaction

Synopsis

In this Polymerase Chain Reaction (PCR) simulation, you will see through eight steps another modern way for to amplify that target DNA. In this virtual experiment, you will find out how to perform PCR and explain the results that the simulation has left to you at the end of the page.

Design the test

After sampling, you will go to the PCR laboratory. In this step, the samples of DNA you collected by using a microchip is thermocycling, and this is the first step from the entire process. In this step, you will learn that thermal cycling is necessary for PCR amplification.

Heat the structure of DNA double helix structure up 95°C

In the simulation, you will see that PCR amplification at the laboratory lab. Observing the structure of DNA and the amplification step including all the steps involved in this PCR amplification process. As well as all specifications of the PCR itself.

Identify the template

In this PCR simulation, you will collect your samples and other needed samples from the laboratory and you will start to prepare the template for amplification. After you see the PCR template, the structure.

Learning Objectives

In this part of this simulation, you will see reports:

1. Results for detection of your pathogen and primer amplification and synthesis.
2. Report for this simulation using this result to detect cancer in this simulation.
