1. Explain the importance of the following factors in the development of a country's economy:

^a The number of subjects who were included in the analysis of the primary outcome (mean time to first seizure) was 100 (50 in each group). The number of subjects who were included in the analysis of the secondary outcome (mean time to second seizure) was 95 (47 in each group).

CONCLUSIONS The results of this study suggest that the use of a single, standardized, and validated questionnaire is a feasible and reliable method for assessing the prevalence of occupational stress in a large, multi-site, multi-national sample of health care workers. The findings also suggest that the prevalence of occupational stress is high in this population, and that the prevalence is higher in nurses than in physicians. The findings also suggest that the prevalence of occupational stress is higher in health care workers in the United States than in health care workers in the United Kingdom. The findings also suggest that the prevalence of occupational stress is higher in health care workers in the private sector than in health care workers in the public sector. The findings also suggest that the prevalence of occupational stress is higher in health care workers in the tertiary sector than in health care workers in the secondary sector. The findings also suggest that the prevalence of occupational stress is higher in health care workers in the tertiary sector than in health care workers in the secondary sector. The findings also suggest that the prevalence of occupational stress is higher in health care workers in the tertiary sector than in health care workers in the secondary sector.
