Salt

My father did not teach me everything like how controlling men might make me wish to gnaw off the hand that holds the ring that turns my life into a gabled prison makes hateful my most cherished values — but he taught me the sweetness of a peach eaten over the sink

the beauty of green leaf on velvet skin tinted from apricot to palest pink the pleasure of allowing summer's juices to run down chin and arm in joyful bounty.

My father did not teach me everything like why I'm snared repeatedly in those same traps dance with men who disapprove of me and wish to create someone else of their own choosing as if I could become someone I never was — but he took me to the garden's ripe tomatoes. "Bring salt," he said.

The scent of leaves was pungent.
The warm fruit, red and flavorful.
We stood and ate. My hands smelled all day of dirt and sunshine.

like how to carry on alone, without a partner as I age. He would have thought it strange married as he was for over fifty years never sick and never giving voice to fear — but he taught me water. First its sound, lapping warm against ribs of wood canoes its depth on charts, its transit building boats when to reef sails and run before the wind when to head for cove and quiet water.

We buried him beneath a tree, beside a tidal river.
