

ATP—The Free Energy Carrier

How does the $\text{ADP} \rightarrow \text{ATP}$ molecular machine capture, store, and release energy?

Head think: Is spending greater than might expect (e.g., 5,000 kJ/mol) the purchase of a bicycle, that the value store up the rest (e.g., 5,000 kJ/mol) when you have a package of gum? That is, cells generate extra energy, produce intermediate products, and use them to generate intermediate products. This means energy is used for the energy. That means the cell is using energy to store energy. It is like using all energy to generate, and then using it to generate intermediate products. In fact, the cell is using energy to store energy, and then using energy to store energy. The cell is using energy to store energy, and then using energy to store energy. The cell is using energy to store energy, and then using energy to store energy.

Problem 1 – Adenosine Triphosphate (ATP)

1. The diagrammed ATP molecule I have shown you, has four parts. Use your knowledge of biochemistry to label the parts of the molecule. The parts are: adenine, ribose, phosphate, and triphosphate groups.

The first part is adenine, the second part is ribose sugar, and the third part is the phosphate groups.

2. What is the third part? What is the fourth part? (The third part is the phosphate groups.)

The fourth part is the triphosphate groups.
