Populations, Communities, and Ecosystems

The natural world can be organized and described in many ways. One of the simplest ways to organize the natural world when you look outside is to put everything you see in the following three categories:

- Living things: plants, animals, and things that are made of living organisms, living or moving.
- Nonliving things: rocks, mountains, water, air, and things that are not made of living organisms.
- Things that are made of living organisms and nonliving things: a tree, a pond, a mountain, a river, and things that are made of living organisms and nonliving things.

Every study of the natural world is made up of all the parts of our world. If you take any one part of our natural world and look at it as a whole, you are studying a population, a community, or an ecosystem. The same for the field of study is ecology.

Individual One horse is an example of an individual.	Population All members of the same species that live in the same area.

Community A group of different species living together in the same area.	Ecosystem All living and nonliving things that live in an area.
