

Towers of Life

They stood hushed and glimmering in the night,
Giants able to frame the moon,
Shimmering magnificently in their might.

Day breaks and the sun gently warms their skin,
Veins begin to pulse with life,
The spirit of a thousand of kin.

Evil tears towards them through the brilliant morning sky,
Propelled by the blackest of hate,
Guided by a lie.

Barely risen they stand with no defense,
Innocent and distracted they are not prepared,
The pain about to be inflicted intense.

Like a bolt of lightning that shatters the moon,
Evil crashes once then twice into their sides,
Their bodies are scorched and torn.

Horribly crippled they continue to stand,
Holding onto life until the last,
Orders are given, they take the command.

The battle is brief, the giants begin to yield,
Life drains from every artery,
Their fate is sealed.

Collapsing to rest,
First to one knee, then to the next,
From their dust will emerge so many a hero.

The question is asked,
How can such evil exist.

Poetry For 7th Grade:

Poetry on Our Terms Aaron Williams, 2014-04-16 Poetry on Our Terms Winners of the 2014 7GP 7th Grade Poetry Contest is the result of the nation's most inclusive 7th grade poetry writing program. More than 1,250 schools of every type including charter, faith-based, public and private were invited to be a part of the program. From the 120 schools that decided to participate, 8,100 students were given the freedom of creative self-expression through poetry to write their own poem about any theme and in any style. Students wrote more than 4,200 poems specifically for the chance to be in this book. This book celebrates the 120 poets and their poems that were chosen by their respective schools. A copy of this anthology was given to each winning poet, their school and community library. Inside they will find sonnets, haikus and rhyming odes written by peers. While one writer bemoans the horrors of war, another proudly salutes the military victories of our country. Native American students write about themes influenced by their culture. Elsewhere there is the pain of being orphaned, the appreciation of family and belonging and several close examinations of bullying. From poem to poem, stanza to stanza you can see how the contest's freedom empowered each newly published poet to celebrate his or her voice. Ultimately, this book is about respect, respect for young authors and their ability to tell us something important. Poetry is better on their terms where the craft of writing and love of language exhibited by each poet clearly speaks for itself. Poetry on Our Terms, 2014. This 2014 poetry anthology is the result of the nation's most inclusive 7th grade poetry writing contest with more than 90 poems from 7 states. The schools ranging from private to public, urban to rural, each chose a winning poet laureate from their 7th grade classes who could write on any topic. In only its fourth year, the contest has expanded from its home base in St. Louis, Missouri to states from Alaska to Florida, from Arizona to Massachusetts. It includes a diverse group of young poets who exemplify the power of the written word and give voice to the joys and sorrows, the wisdom and whimsy, the hopes and dreams of our next generation. Children's Interests in Poetry, Miriam Blanton Huber, Herbert Bascom Bruner, Charles Madison Curry, 1927.
