What hormones are involved in the maintenance of blood sugar?

Why?

The body always has glucose in it and for its energy. The pancreas has its islets of Langerhans which release some hormones. One of these hormones is insulin. Insulin allows glucose to enter the cells. If there is too much glucose in the blood, the pancreas releases insulin. If there is too little glucose in the blood, the pancreas releases glucagon. Glucagon allows the liver to release glucose into the blood. The pancreas also releases somatostatin which stops the release of insulin and glucagon.
