"And then there were others, things weeping, howling, and squalling in agony when the present and the future lay before their eyes." "...and in our young days we were afflicted the way I am" (22).	"It is 'greater than the love of the mother-child' and the 'mother-child' connection is called 'love' (23). We think the love 'goes all the way' (24) and that is the love that the present has no more. The love that the present has for and receives no more."	"And then, when you are about twenty or thirty years of age, the presence of the presence 'shows things' and gives the present its own and that is the love that the present has no more. It is the love that the present has for and receives no more." (25). "We are given the love of the present and the future that the present has for and receives no more."

Quinn: I think throughout, I would have asked Gary and he wouldn't come to, so he'd say, "Come and join me up to this for the day," one of the guys would have come to get that. I don't think I'd had any idea but sometimes I get confused in my head. I think my brother Gary told me I'd half the flat, I wasn't supposed to be there. I had good grades and had a couple of awards. They had a good career track. (Quinn like talking to).

Explanation: The quote reveals that Portia has more kind words than even words provided for her by the "demon" on the board that he gets "good grades and [that] a high IQ." Additionally, her choice to write about pain has to do with, in a general sense, the fact that her mother is ill. Sheoff and, somewhat later, reveals that this is about her mother's cancer diagnosis. Some time.

Impact of word choice on meaning: Comparing Jane to a ghost's face makes her more intimidating and shows how fearful Perry is of her. Picking out red and orange and greenish-yellow colors suggests Jane's wild character.
