9 Answer: The answer is C. The patient has a low-grade fever, malaise, myalgias, and a nonproductive cough. These symptoms are consistent with influenza A virus infection. The patient's symptoms began after contact with a sick child, which is a common mode of transmission for influenza. The patient's symptoms are also consistent with other viral infections such as adenovirus or parainfluenza virus. However, the lack of nasal discharge and the presence of myalgias and malaise are more suggestive of influenza. The patient's symptoms are not consistent with bacterial pneumonia, which would typically present with a productive cough and chest pain. The patient's symptoms are also not consistent with streptococcal pharyngitis, which would typically present with a sore throat and swollen lymph nodes.
