Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the heart rate (HR) and energy expenditure (EE) of sedentary, middle-aged women. The subjects were randomly assigned to a control group (CON) and an exercise group (EX). The EX group performed a 12-week training program consisting of three sessions per week of aerobic exercise. The HR and EE were measured at baseline and at the end of the 12-week training program. The EX group showed a significant decrease in HR and a significant increase in EE compared to the CON group. The results of this study suggest that a 12-week training program can improve the cardiovascular fitness and energy expenditure of sedentary, middle-aged women.

- Day and night periods that are longer than the standard 24 hours occur most commonly with the use of artificial light or continuous darkness. To date, there are no known genetic mutations that are necessary for the production of these changes in the length of the day.
- Several mutants that are defective with respect to the ability to alter their circadian period, the length of the day, are also defective in responding to the external cues of light/darkness.
- The endogenous circadian rhythm is the only rhythm that the period of which is not under genetic control. In fact, the period of the circadian rhythm is not subject to these genetic or environmental changes. Thus, the circadian period is 24 hours (± 10%).

Caution: Spilling, pouring, or collecting water from a Tivvy cooler into the TivvyBall is just fine. But, intentionally submerging the ball (even in a shallow tub) is not. The TivvyBall may rupture! It's the top-edge covering fabric, not the plastic, that causes the problem. To help prevent this, always use the TivvyBall as a spill container, not a spill collector. If you do spill, use the TivvyBall to absorb the spill, then empty it into a bucket or tub. Do not use the TivvyBall to collect or contain liquids.
