Abstract

As the temperature decreases, the rate of molecular motion slowly decreases. Molecules that are bonded remain close to each other and vibrate. In liquids, molecules move a little farther apart and vibrate more. In gases, molecules move even farther apart and vibrate more. As the temperature decreases, the rate of molecular motion decreases. At a certain point, the molecules stop moving. This is the point at which the substance changes from a liquid to a solid. The molecules are now packed closely together and vibrate in place. The temperature at which this occurs is called the freezing point. The freezing point of water is 0°C (32°F). The freezing point of most substances is lower than that of water. The freezing point of mercury is -39°C (-38°F). The freezing point of alcohol is -114°C (-173°F). The freezing point of oxygen is -183°C (-289°F). The freezing point of hydrogen is -253°C (-423°F). The freezing point of helium is -273°C (-453°F). The freezing point of absolute zero is -273°C (-453°F). The freezing point of absolute zero is the point at which all molecular motion ceases.
