Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the heart rate (HR) and heart rate reserve (HRR) of sedentary middle-aged men. The subjects were divided into two groups: a control group and an exercise group. The exercise group performed a 12-week training program consisting of three sessions per week, each lasting 30 minutes. The control group did not participate in any exercise program. The HR and HRR were measured at rest and during maximal exercise at the beginning and end of the 12-week period. The results showed that the exercise group had a significant decrease in HR and HRR at rest and a significant increase in HR and HRR during maximal exercise compared to the control group. These findings suggest that a 12-week training program can improve cardiovascular fitness in sedentary middle-aged men.

- Day and night periods that are longer than the standard 24 hours occur most commonly with the use of artificial light or continuous darkness. Tapes that are too long or too short can change the phase of the clock.
- Artificial sources of light will only work if the light is above the specifications, the length of the exposure may differ depending on the cell, tissue or organism.
- The end of the light exposure is important. It may change the phase of the clock, but the period of the following dark period is usually not affected. The period of the following dark period is usually about 12 hours, but can be as short as 8 hours or as long as 16 hours.

Preventions: How To Avoid The Worst

- 1) Using the information about homophily and assortativity to (a) create the initial condition of the network, and (b) attach new nodes to the network.
- 2) Using the edge-formation model described above, forming the network until the desired size is reached.
- 3) Repeat the edge-formation process until the desired network size is reached and the Quick Network Growth algorithm terminates.
- 4) Repeat the homophily and assortativity steps until the desired quantities for the network are reached, having used step 2, and then the edge-formation step.
- 5) Initialize the flow (the initial condition) of the network and the flow matrix.
- 6) Execute the routing algorithm to obtain the flow in the network and use the flow to attach new nodes to the network as proposed in step 1.
