

Example 4.2. Three identical point masses are fixed symmetrically on the periphery of a circle. Obtain the resultant gravitational force on any point mass M at the centre of the circle. Extend this idea to more than three identical masses symmetrically located on the periphery. How far can you extend this concept?

Solution:

- (i) Figure below shows three identical point masses m on the periphery of a circle of radius r . Mass M is at the centre of the circle. Gravitational forces on M due to these masses are attractive and are directed as shown.

In magnitude, $F_{MA} = F_{MB} = F_{MC} = \frac{GMm}{r^2}$

Forces F_{MB} and F_{MC} are resolved along F_{MA} and perpendicular to F_{MA} as shown. Components perpendicular to F_{MA} cancel each other. Components along F_{MA} are $F_{MB} \cos 60^\circ = F_{MC} \cos 60^\circ = \frac{1}{2} F_{MA}$ each. Magnitude of their resultant is F_{MA} and its direction is opposite to that of F_{MA} . Thus, the resultant force on mass M is zero.

- (ii) For any even number of equal masses, the force due to any mass m is balanced (cancelled) by diametrically opposite mass. For any odd number of masses, as seen for 3, the components perpendicular to one of them cancel each other while the components parallel to one of these add up in such a way that the resultant is zero for any number of identical masses m located symmetrically on the periphery.
- (iii) As the number of masses tends to infinity, their collective shape approaches circumference of the circle, which is nothing but a ring. Thus, the gravitational force exerted by a ring mass on any other mass at its centre is zero.

In three-dimensions, we can imagine a uniform hollow sphere to be made up of infinite number of such rings with a common diameter. Thus, the gravitational force for any mass kept at the centre of a hollow sphere is zero.

Do you know ?

Unification of forces: Newton unified terrestrial (related to Earth and hence to our daily life) and celestial (related to universe) domains under a common law of gravitation. The experimental discoveries of Oersted (1777-1851) and Faraday showed that electric and magnetic phenomena are in general inseparable leading to what is called 'EM phenomenon'. Electromagnetism and optics were unified by Maxwell with the proposition that light is an EM wave. Einstein attempted to unify gravity and electromagnetism under general relativity but could not succeed. The EM and the weak nuclear force have now been unified as a single 'electro-weak' force.

4.5.2. Contact and Non-Contact Forces:

For some forces, like gravitational force, electrostatic force, magnetostatic force, etc., physical contact is not an essential condition. These forces exist even if the objects are distant or physically separated. Such forces are non-contact forces.

Forces resulting only due to contact are called contact forces. All these are EM in nature, arising due to some deformation. Normal reaction, forces occurring during collision, force of friction, etc., are contact forces. There are two common categories of contact forces. Two objects in contact, while exerting mutual force, try to push each other away along their common normal. Quite often we call it as 'normal reaction' force or 'normal' force. While standing on a table, we push the table away from us (downward) and the table pushes us away from it (upward) both being equal in magnitude and acting along the same 'normal' line.
