

Light Study Guide

Light is a form of energy that travels in waves. Light travels from the sun to the earth in waves.

White light is actually made up of all the colors. These colors range from red to violet.

A prism is an object that separates white light into the colors that make it up.

A prism bends or refracts light waves. The wavelength of each color bend at a different angle.

When white light from the sun passes through raindrops, the raindrops act as prisms which separate the white light into seven colors. When raindrops separate light from the Sun, you observe a rainbow.

All light is made of waves. Light can be described using wavelengths.

A wavelength is the distance from the top of one wave to the top of the next wave. The top of the wave is called the crest.

The shorter the wavelength, the more energy the wave has.

Low energy waves have long wavelengths. As the energy of a wave increases, the wavelength decreases.

Red light has the longest wavelength. Violet light has the shortest.
