

Unit 7 – Reflection Paper 2

In this paper, I will examine two of my ethical commitments, investigate its relationship to the families of moral values, and describe how the families might apply to my commitments as a whole. I will focus on the ethical commitment to honesty and responsibility and how it relates to the families of moral values. These play a significant dynamic in our lives as a person, the choices we make, and how we present ourselves in our most delicate and vulnerable shape. "Our values are those things we care about that matter to us; those goals and ideals we aspire to and measure ourselves or others or our society by" (Weston, 2018 p. 97). They are a part of our thinking, a part of who we are, and by embracing them, we keep ourselves more unbroken, less broken, and better able to incorporate our character and values. Honestly, I don't recall exactly how I approached embracing these values true to me. There wasn't one particular moment or person that I came to learn about these commitments. It's more of a sequence of small to big occurrences that have happened in my life and teachings from distinctive persons that have guided me to perceive the significance of these values. One of the significant reasons I can say why I have held these values or ethical commitments with me is because I've seen and experienced the destruction they can have when they seem unreal in our lives. For example, my brother-in-law was an alcoholic person for a very long time, and he didn't have honesty or responsibility towards my sister and their children which resulted in them struggling and living a toxic life with no happiness or peacefulness. Ever since I began to learn the importance of being an honest or responsible person, I realized that it is those choices and actions that define who we will become and how we will direct our lives.

All our values or ethical commitments fall into categories. They are the four families of moral values which include the ethics of the persons which "spotlight and uphold the special nature and value of persons"(Weston, 2018 p.105), the ethics of happiness that "challenges us to achieve the greatest balance of happiness over suffering" (Weston, 2018 p.106), the ethics of
