Project: Taxonomy Skills
Grade/Subject: 7th grade Life Science

In Classroom Instruction That Works, Marzano, Pickering, and Pollock suggest that "representing similarities and differences in graphic or symbolic form enhances students' understanding of and ability to use knowledge." Science students can compare and contrast images of various animals and plants in Picasa by adding captions. Then they can organize the images into albums that represent either existing taxonomies - or classifications that students create themselves. In this way, students exercise their powers of observation and learn science by doing what scientists do. In addition, the visual medium is a vocabulary development aid for many students, especially English learners. Extend the assignment by sharing students' albums via Picasa Web and asking students to evaluate each other's work.
