First steps are critical to the success of any R&D program in nanotechnology, says Michael Buehler, director, nanotechnology research, National Science Foundation. "The first step is to establish a common language among the nanotechnology community," he says. "The second step is to establish a common vision of the future of nanotechnology." Buehler says that the nanotechnology community is currently in a state of flux, with many different groups and organizations working on different aspects of the technology. He says that the first step is to establish a common language among the nanotechnology community, and the second step is to establish a common vision of the future of nanotechnology.
