Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program on the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women. The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The subjects were 40 sedentary, middle-aged women who were randomly assigned to either a supervised walking program or a control group. The walking program consisted of 12 weeks of supervised walking, 3 times per week, for 30 minutes per session. The control group consisted of 20 women who did not participate in the walking program. The subjects were assessed at baseline and at 12 weeks for physical and psychological health. The physical health assessment included measures of weight, body mass index (BMI), waist circumference, and blood pressure. The psychological health assessment included measures of self-esteem, anxiety, and depression. The results of the study showed that the walking program had a significant positive effect on the physical and psychological health of the subjects. The walking program resulted in a significant decrease in weight, BMI, waist circumference, and blood pressure. The walking program also resulted in a significant increase in self-esteem and a significant decrease in anxiety and depression. The results of this study suggest that a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program can improve the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women.

Abstract

These authors' findings suggest that teachers spend the considerable majority of their working time on tasks that are unrelated to their students' learning. Although we cannot say whether the results of this study are generalizable to all teachers, the authors note that the results may represent a worst case scenario.

Abstract: The authors report on a study of the effects of a 12-week, 12-session, group-based, self-help program for people with depression. The program was designed to help people with depression to manage their symptoms and to improve their social and personal functioning. The program was evaluated using a randomized controlled trial design. The results of the trial showed that the program had a significant positive effect on the symptoms of depression and on the social and personal functioning of the participants. The program was found to be effective in reducing the symptoms of depression and in improving the social and personal functioning of the participants. The program was found to be effective in reducing the symptoms of depression and in improving the social and personal functioning of the participants.
