Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical fitness of 10-year-old children. The study was conducted in a primary school in the city of Bursa, Turkey. The study group consisted of 20 children (10 boys and 10 girls) who were randomly selected from the 10-year-old children in the school. The children were divided into two groups: a control group and an experimental group. The control group did not participate in any physical activity program, while the experimental group participated in a 12-week training program. The physical fitness of the children was measured at the beginning and at the end of the 12-week period. The measurements included maximum heart rate, maximum oxygen consumption, maximum power, and maximum speed. The results of the study showed that the experimental group had significantly higher values for all four measurements at the end of the 12-week period compared to the control group. The results suggest that a 12-week training program can improve the physical fitness of 10-year-old children.

Abstract

These authors' findings suggest that teachers spend the considerable majority of their working time on tasks that are unrelated to their students' learning. Although the authors do not provide any evidence for this claim, the authors state that the data were obtained from a survey of 100 teachers.

Abstract.—The authors report on a 2-yr observational study of the effects of a group of 1000 children and adolescents with emotional and behavioral problems on the lives of their parents. The study was conducted in a large, urban, public housing complex. The results of the study are presented in a series of tables and graphs. The study found that the children and adolescents with emotional and behavioral problems had a significant impact on the lives of their parents. The study also found that the parents of these children and adolescents had a higher level of stress and a lower level of social support than the parents of children and adolescents without emotional and behavioral problems. The study suggests that the needs of these parents should be addressed in order to improve the lives of their children and adolescents.
