It is important to note that the results of this study are based on a cross-sectional design. Therefore, the causal relationship between the variables cannot be established. The results of this study suggest that the use of mobile phones in the workplace is associated with increased productivity and reduced absenteeism. However, the results also suggest that the use of mobile phones in the workplace is associated with increased stress and reduced job satisfaction. Therefore, the use of mobile phones in the workplace should be carefully monitored and managed to ensure that the benefits are maximized and the negative effects are minimized.
