

This circuit breaker is mainly used to be able to easily isolate the solar panels from the MPPT charge controller in the event you disconnect the battery so as not to damage the MPPT charge controller.

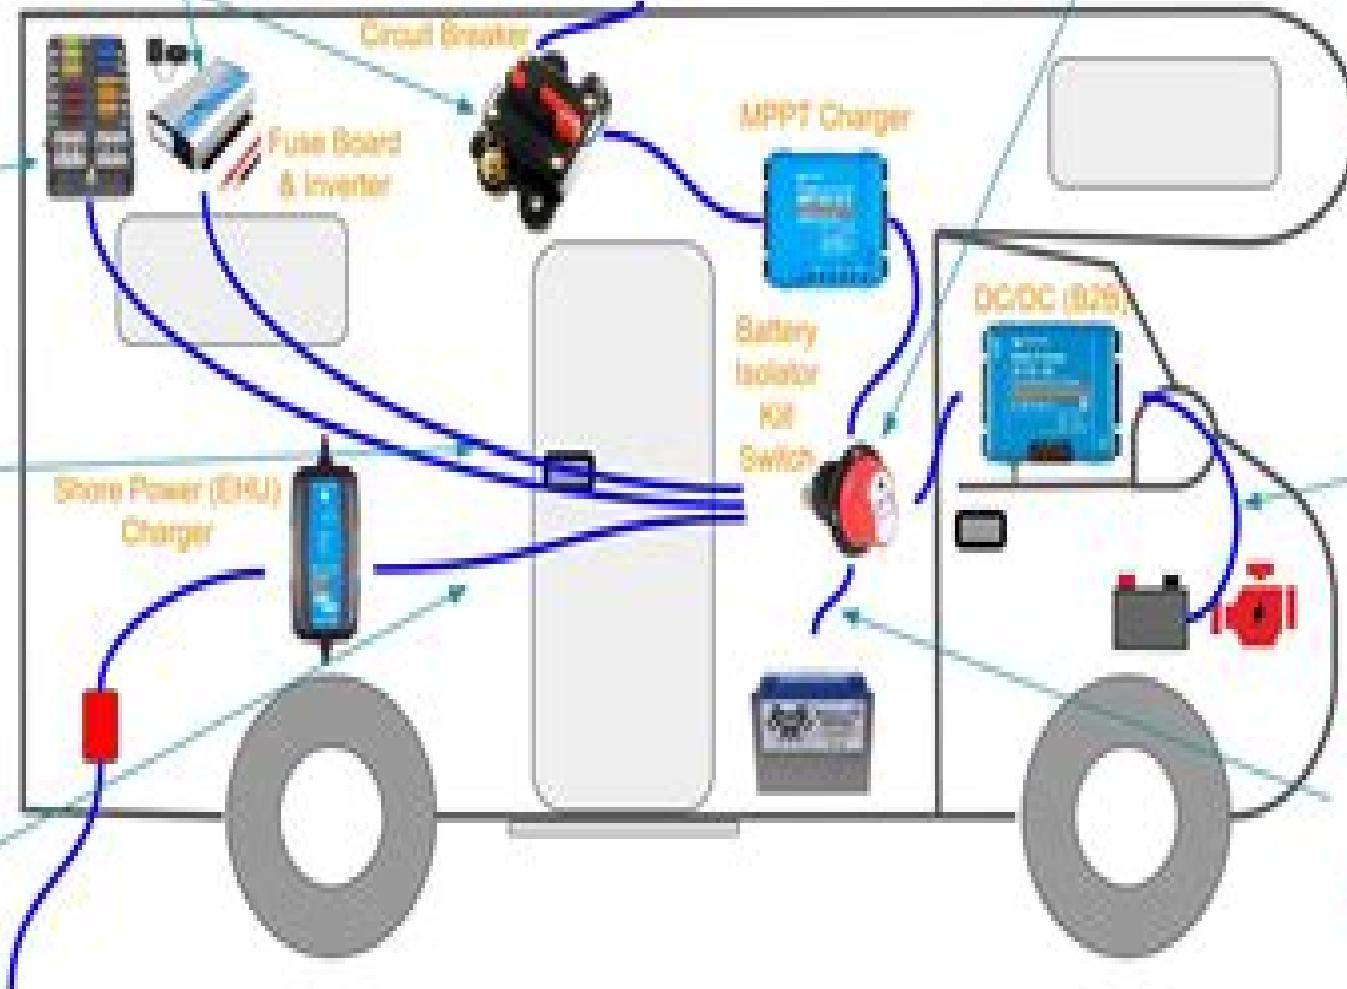

You can then wire in AC sockets to your inverter.

You can then go from your fuse board to lights, 12v DC sockets, etc.

Insert fuse between shore inverter & battery kill switch that is sufficient to protect wire & avoid electrical fire if there is a short.

Insert fuse between shore power charger & battery kill switch that is sufficient to protect wire & avoid electrical fire if there is a short.

This kill switch is useful to be able to isolate your battery when you park up your rig. This is especially important if you use LiFePO4 batteries to avoid them being charged below freezing temperatures.

*Remember to disconnect your MPPT charger from your solar panels if you isolate your battery!

* If you use Lead Acid batteries, I would not recommend disconnecting charge for extended periods as they will deplete and you'll likely kill them.

Insert fuse between engine battery & DC/DC converter that is sufficient to protect wire & avoid electrical fire if there is a short.

Insert fuse between kill switch & battery that is sufficient to protect wire & avoid electrical fire if there is a short.
