Abstract

The purpose of this study was to determine whether there were differences in the prevalence of risk factors for low back pain between two groups of nurses. The first group consisted of nurses who had been employed by their respective hospitals for less than five years and the second group consisted of nurses who had been employed by their respective hospitals for more than five years. Data were collected from questionnaires distributed to all nurses in each hospital. The results showed that the prevalence of risk factors for low back pain was significantly higher in the first group than in the second group.
