algorithms and are useful in many applications. We can think of a search tree as a backward-chaining search using depth-first search. This is a search strategy in which we first visit all the nodes in the root node, then the nodes in the root node's children, then the nodes in the root node's children's children, and so on. This is the approach used by depth-first programming systems, which are efficient enough and robust enough to be used in many applications. Using logic programming combines the good ideas of backward-chaining with the forward-chaining efficiency of forward-chaining. It is also simpler, the search space being much smaller than the search space of forward-chaining. It is also simpler, the search space being much smaller than the search space of forward-chaining.

9.4.1 Backward-chaining search

Backward-chaining search is described in Section 9.4.1. The search space is much smaller than the search space of forward-chaining, and many general search algorithms are efficient algorithms, and the search space is much smaller than the search space of forward-chaining.
