By the early 1990s, however, it was clear that the economic benefits of trade and globalization, though real, had been unevenly shared. There had been problems, notably the collapse in value of the Latin American debt crisis, and a growing fear that globalization was the greatest threat to the welfare of the world's poorest countries. The WTO was established to replace the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) and to oversee the implementation of the WTO agreements.
